

Nikolaos Gaitenidis is a lecturer under contract at the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. He has completed his PhD studies in the department of International and European Studies (University of Macedonia). He holds a BA in International and European, Economic and Political Studies, and an MA in International and EU Law. He is a research associate at the Centre of International and European Economic Law, responsible for the design and implementation of several research and institution building projects. He has also been involved in several Jean Monnet Projects. His research interests and publications focus on the protection of human rights in Europe, social and cultural rights, equality policies and the fight against discrimination, and the rights of indigenous peoples and minorities. He has published in collective volumes and Journals and he has participated in numerous academic conferences, roundtables and events.